Boom back but money woes still haunt

MONEY is the biggest source of worry for people despite the economy's strong growth.

More people are worried about their finances than last year.

Family and health were the issues that came next when people were asked to list their worries in order of importance, according to a survey commissioned by insurance and protection company Royal London among Irish people.

It was the third year in a row that money topped the list of worries for consumers.

Experts said that money concerns have become more intense despite the rise in the economy. This is likely due to the ongoing uncertainty over Brexit, and the rising cost of housing and rents.
